

ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE: FEMINISM, RHETORIC AND POLICY

GNDR_ST 390

SPRING
2022

To quote activist group, “Extinction Rebellion,” the fire alarm on global warming has been pulled and is ringing at full volume. All scientific data points to the conclusion that decisive and immediate action will be necessary to avoid significant damage to global ecosystems and communities by 2030. This course starts from this sense of urgency and the risk it runs of cuing interventions that, while efficient and effective, entrench existing inequalities. Instead, how can we be mindful of environmental solutions forwarded by marginalized communities? How might changes in global environmental policy also usher in changes in global social justice?

Bailey Flynn

MW 3:30-4:50pm
Parke Hall 215